THE KAISER ADVISED

Startling Moves May Come in Russ Affairs.

REPRESSIVE MEASURES

To Be Applied in Internal Rather Than Foreign Affairs—Startling Developments Are Expected.

New York, July 27.—A St. Petersburg cable to the Times says:

There is a consensus of opinion here that the German emperor deliberately planned and imposed the meeting with the Russian emperor for the purpose of bringing his influence to bear upon the czar in internal rather than foreign affairs.

Intense resentment and indignation are expressed in the bureaucratic circles over the decision of the zemstvo congress to appeal to the people.

I am able to assert from personal observation that military circles are much more concerned with politics than with strategy, and that a large proportion of the officers, especially subalterns, are in favor of a constitution.

INDORSE ZEMSTVOS.

Marshals of the Nobility Demand Reforms in Russia.

London, July 27.—A despatch from St. Petersburg to the Exchange Telegraph company, says that at a meeting held there yesterday the marshals of the nobility adopted generally the reform programme of the recent congress of zemstvos at Moscow.

ALLEGED MURDERER LYING IN SWAMP. Giant Negro Hides While Grim Posses Stands Guard—He Is Wanted Dead or Alive.

New York, July 27.—Hemmed in on all sides by armed farmers and constables who stand ready to shoot him at sight, and almost exhausted by a long pursuit from town to town and from farm to farm, Charles Long, the giant negro of Trenton, who is charged with the murder of a rival in that city, yesterday was lying in what is known in New Jersey as Dismal swamp, between South Plainfield and Plainfield, a wide, dangerous stretch of soggy land, from which there are few avenues of escape.

Dismal swamp is not a pleasant spot to spend a night. Stretching over many an acre, marked here and there with blotches of quicksand, closely covered by clumps of scraggly bushes, some of which surround little pools of stagnant water, and extending to the low hills that roughly run down to its treacherous edge, the swamp is truly dismal, even under an open sun.

The watchers knew the land too well to venture in it during the hours of darkness and contented themselves with remaining on the border ready to shoot down the negro should he become desperate after realizing what sort of a region he had been compelled to take refuge in.

Long is wanted in connection with the murder of Matthew Cunningham in Trenton on June 16. Cunningham's head was blown off with a shotgun. Long was not found when the time for arrest came, but was later seen in the vicinity of Plainfield, working on the farm of Frank Nelson, in Piscataway township. He was in the fields when an automobile drove up and its occupants had some talk with the negro's employer.

Long took to his heels and disappeared in the adjoining woods. That was a signal for a more strenuous search for him, and soon the pursuit turned into a man hunt.

The negro made his way to New Market, where he almost ran into the arms of the chief of police, who, with a posse of citizens, was on the lookout for him. His greeting was a volley of shots, a shower of which fell on all sides of him. He got away from the posse, however, making himself the terror of the countryside, until, on Monday night, he ran into the swamp and concealed himself in the bushes. He is not armed, but carries a big club.

MORTON NOW PRESIDENT

Equitable Directors Elect Him to Succeed Alexander.

LATTER OUT OF BOARD

Speculation as to Whether Young Hyde Will Resign from the Society's Directorate—Family Interests at Stake.

New York, July 27.—At a two hours session of the Equitable directors yesterday, the resignations of former President James W. Alexander and Nevada N. Stranahan as directors were accepted.

Paul Morton was elected president of the society, retaining, it is understood, the chairmanship as well. A special meeting of the directors will be held today at which additional directors will be elected, and amendments to the charter of the society considered.

James W. Alexander's resignation as a director had been expected. On the day that Mr. Morton was elected chairman of the board he handed in his resignation as president and it was accepted shortly afterward.

It was rumored about the building that the matter of James H. Hyde's resignation from the board was discussed at yesterday's meeting. Mr. Hyde handed in his resignation as vice-president on the day of Mr. Morton's election as chairman, but when it was accepted it was announced that he would remain a member of the board.

It was said yesterday afternoon that Mr. Morton's salary as president had not yet been fixed. Several days ago a rumor appeared to the effect that he was to get $75,000 a year. The estimate was made from the fact that he had cut all salaries above $15,000 20 per cent. It was argued that he had taken 5 per cent, more from the salary of $100,000 which Mr. Alexander as president had been drawing.

The question of Mr. Morton's salary, it was said, might be definitely settled at today's special meeting.

COSTLY LOVEMAKING. Fine of $40 for Man Who Held Married Woman's Hand. Cambridge, Mass., July 26.—The price of holding hands and kissing in Cambridge was officially fixed by Judge Almy yesterday morning, when he fined Carl L. Mix that sum for his attentions to Mrs. Hannah W. Anderson, without her consent.

Mrs. Anderson, who lives on Lawn street, testified that Mix called at her home on his butcher cart rounds, June 24, and held her hands and kissed her. Mix denied any love-making of that sort, claiming that he merely took her hand to say good-bye and impress on her to keep her appointment with him about looking at a house he owned which she had talked of renting.

While Mix had Mrs. Anderson's hand in his, Mr. Anderson appeared upon the scene. He was so angered over the occurrence that he had his wife prefer the assault charge.

Judge Almy found the defendant guilty and fined him $40. He appealed and was held in $200 bonds. Mix was defended by H. H. Winslow.

$1,000,000 FOR HUSBAND. Poor Conductor Who Married Heiress Gets All Her Money. San Francisco, July 26.—Judge Sayre, at Lakeport, has handed down a decision giving the entire Floyd estate, worth $1,000,000, to Milos Gorgeno, husband of the late Miss Floyd.

Gorgeno was a conductor on a street car and his handsome face and polished manner won the rich but eccentric Miss Floyd. She was fifteen years older than Gorgeno, but, despite family opposition, she married him, and a year later died, leaving him all her estate except the house where she lived.

The will was contested by near relatives on the ground of the testator's incompetency.

WENT ON A STRIKE. Diggers on Northfield Water System Wanted More Pay. Northfield, July 27.—The work of excavating for the new water system was commenced here yesterday, the digging being done by a gang of Italians who number sixteen. At noon twelve of the number struck, as they were told that they could get $1.75 per day at the university, while the village only paid $1.50. The other four kept at work. The strikers went to the university, but found that there was no job for them.

The Times' Daily Short Story.

A BIT OF AMATEUR DETECTIVE WORK

(Original.)

I suppose I am considered a man of fine literary taste, though the only evidence I have of this is that my friends are continually asking my opinion of this or that book. One class of fiction I always detested—detective stories. Today I read every detective story I can get my hands on. This is the cause of my conversion.

One summer my friend Charlie Coe asked me to spend some time with him at his country seat. He had there a number of guests, including Virginia Carney, whom I had met before, and Miss Kate Taylor, whom I met there for the first time. Virginia Carney was inclined to literature of a refined type, and it was supposed that on account of congenial tastes she and I would make a match.

When Miss Taylor told me that she loved detective stories it seemed to me that we could never have anything in common. One evening as I was hurrying down to dinner, being late, I saw a well dressed man on the stairs with an overcoat on his arm and a satchel in his hand. On seeing me he looked a trifle embarrassed, told me that he was a newly-arrived guest, that he did not wish to disturb the host while at dinner and he would be obliged if I would show him to some room where he could make a toilet.

The butler was in the hall below, and it occurred to me to turn the man over to him; but, not wishing to appear disobliging, I took him up to my own room and left him there.

I did not think of him again, nor did I see him. I played an exciting game of billiards after dinner and from then till midnight danced. The next morning early I was off with a fishing party and did not return till shortly before dinner.

On entering the house I met my host and told him of my success at fishing. He listened without showing the slightest interest—indeed, was free venturing in his demeanor toward me. At dinner the guests treated me in the same fashion. No one refused to speak to me, but all avoided me. During the evening I went to Miss Carney and endeavored to draw from her the cause of my singular treatment. I soon found that, whatever the cause was, she had been as fully affected by it as any one else. But she gave me no satisfaction.

Later, much depressed by what I could not understand, I went out on to the piazza and sat alone. Hearing a light step behind me, I turned, and there was Kate Taylor. I arose and bowed formally, not knowing what to expect.

"You have noticed, I suppose," she said, "a coolness toward you. I doubt if you know the cause."

"I do not."

"A number of guests have missed since last night some of their valu-

bles, and a diamond brooch was found yesterday morning by the manservant who brushes the guests' clothes in the side pocket of your dinner jacket."

For a moment I was thunderstruck, but the guest, or, rather, thief, whom I had taken to my room soon came back to my memory and accounted for everything. I hurriedly gave the girl an account of the matter, and I saw at once that she believed my story. Then I started to go in and explain the matter to the host.

"One moment," said Miss Taylor. "Will he believe you?"

"Why not? Do you not believe me?"

"Yes, but I did not believe you guilty in the first place. If I had I don't think I would be much influenced by your story. In criminal cases you will notice that people range themselves on one side or the other and do not change their opinions whatever the evidence or the verdict."

"What course do you advise?"

"I have always had a fancy for detective work. Suppose you do nothing for the present and leave the matter to me."

I was glad to avail myself of any assistance. She asked me to tell my story over, questioning me minutely as I did so. Then we separated, it being understood that she was not to treat me any differently from the others.

The next few days were torture to me. Avoided by the guests and treated coolly by the host, I wished to leave, but Miss Taylor advised my remaining, so I stayed on and every day was the more shunned.

At the end of the fifth day, just before dinner, the host asked for the attendance of every guest in the drawing room. I felt sure that my time had come; that I was about to be denounced. When we were assembled, Coe addressed us:

"My friends, a robbery has occurred in this house which has thrown suspicion on one guest and has been unraveled by another." He then told the story of my meeting the man in the hall and continued: "A lady took up the case, and, from the fact of the butler having been in the hall when or soon after the assumed guest entered, she suspected him and left money (marked) where it would tempt him. He was caught in the trap, and on promise of immunity confessed that he had admitted the thief while we were at dinner. The unexpected meeting on the stairs had well nigh frustrated the thief's plans. Thinking he would be caught, he slipped the brooch in the guest's pocket. Our valuables have all been recovered. The name of the exonerated guest I need not mention; the amateur detective is Miss Taylor."

Every one in the room took me by the hand and congratulated me on my vindication, but I have never since spoken to any one of them except Kate Taylor, who is now my wife. S. HUNTER HALSEY.
